His celebrated Lecture on Courtship and Marriage. 2nd Good and Bad Luck on the Money. Also his very highly intellectual and classical lecture on the Formation of Character. The Conditions: One half of the proceeds. Address J. W. STEVENSON,

Elisabetta Sirani.

Among the followers of Guido Repi this young woman, who died when but twenty-five years old, is conspicuous for her talents and interesting on account of the story of her life. She was the daughter of a reputable artist, and was born at Bologna about 1749. She was certainly very industrious, since one of her biographers names one hundred and fifty pictures and etchings made by her, and all these must have been done within a period of about ten

Much has been said of the ease and rapidity with which she worked; one anecdote relates that on an occasion when it happened that the Duchess of Brunswick, the Duchess, of Mirandolaand Duke Cosimo de Medici, with other persons, all met at her studio, she astonished and delighted them by the ease and skill with which she sketched and shaded drawings of the subjects which one after another named

The story of her life, aside from her art, gives an undying interest to her name, and insures her remembrance for all time. In person she was beautiful, and the sweetness of her character and manner won for her the love of all those who were associated with her. She was also a charming singer and was ever ready to give pleasure to her friends. Her admiring biographers also commend her taste in dress, which was very simple; and they even go so far as to praise her moderation in eating! She was well sleffled in all domestic matters, and would rise at daybreak to perform her by a cricket, when she sagely observed. lowly household duties, never allowing her art to displace the homly occupations which property, as she thought. made a part of her life.

Elisabetta Sirani's name has come down through two hundred and seventeen years as one whose "devoted filial affection, feminine grace, and artless benignity of manner added a luster to her great talents, and completed a personality which her friends regarded as an ideal of perfection."

The sudden death of this artist has with a hanker-for-whisky look in our | added a tragic element to her story-The cause of it has never been known, but the theory that she died from poison, has been very generally accepted. Several reasons for this crime have been given : one is, that she was sacrificed to the jealously of other artists, as Domenichino had been: another belief was that a princely lover whom she had treated with scorn, had taken her life because she had dared to place herself, in her lowly station, above his rank and power.

A servant girl named Lucia Tolomelli, who had been long in the serservice of the Sirani family, was suspected and tried for this crime. She was sentenced to banishment; but, after a time, Elisabetra's father irequested that Lucia should be allowed to return, as he had no reason for believing her guilty. And so the mystery of the cause of her death has never been solved; but its effect upon the whole city of Bologna, where it occurred, is an exact matter of history.

The entire people felt a personal loss in her death, and the day of her burial was one of general mourning. The ceremonies of her funeral were attended with great pomp, and she was buried beside her master, Guido Reni, in the chapel of Our Lady of the Rosary, in the magnificent church of the Dominicans. Poets and orators vied with one another in sounding her praises. --St. Nicholas.
